Acknowledgements

I am extremely grateful to the following willing contributors to the text:

S. B. Nimmo, Pete Nuttall (Chapter 9), Liz Forbat (Case 1), Ross Gordon (Case 2), Claire Ridsdale (Case 3) and Jennifer Thomson (Quantitative Analysis Section).

Thanks also to Clive Nancarrow as I have ‘borrowed’ from our work throughout the book.

To those who have been encouraging and have critically read (and re-read) versions of the chapters (who are not all listed here – but you know who you are!) – thank you.

And I am always indebted to Mum, Dad, Ade, Rebecca and Toby

Children and adolescents may come to treatment under a number of circumstances. They may be brought to treatment by their parent(s), they may be brought to treatment by a guardian (an individual or a representative of an agency such as Child Protective Services or Department of Social Services, for example), or they may seek out treatment on their own. In these situations the client may in fact be an organization or individual other than the child or adolescent who is to receive the treatment. Thus, the informed consent process is of great importance for clarifying roles, responsibilities, and expectations with agreements being reached at the outset, before treatment is provided.

Understanding depression in children and adolescents. -Terveysnetti. Bachelor's thesis | abstract turku university of applied sciences. The facts provided in the thesis were taken from several published scientific researched articles; therefore, the target groups that were included were from different conducted research studies. The target groups were children and adolescents, where both boys and girls were included. The information provided by this thesis will be published in Terveysnetti a webpage provided for the public viewer. The contents will be written in English.

Children and adolescents with cow's milk allergy (CMA) avoid milk and have a calcium intake below the RDI. The aim of this study was to examine the association between consumption of a milk-free diet and fracture risk. In this case-control study conducted in Poland, 57 boys
