Ian Hurd is a scholar of international politics at Northwestern University with interests in the politics, theory, and practice of international law and international organizations. A leading scholar of IR theory, he is head of the International Organizations section of ISA and the director of the International Studies Program at Northwestern. He serves on the editorial boards of several journals on law, politics, and global affairs. His academic work appears in leading journals, edited collections, and single-authored books, and he contributes regularly to public media on international affairs. Upcoming work includes a series of articles, workshops and a book on the politics of the international rule of law, a major project on international accountability of international organizations, and more. He is co-editor of the forthcoming Oxford Handbook of International Organizations. At Northwestern, he teaches courses on IR theory, international law, international organizations, and political science research methods, as well as a large lecture course on 'Introduction to International Relations.'
